2002

Public Information and Policy Research

ExxonMobil supports organizations that research significant domestic and foreign policy issues and promote informed discussion on issues of direct relevance to business and the company's ongoing operations. In 2002, worldwide contributions for Public Information and Policy Research totaled $5.6 million, with $5.1 million focused within the United States.

We support programs that increase the United States' knowledge of the world and shape U.S. foreign policy. We fund the Council on Foreign Relations to assist them in constructive discussions both in private and in public, and to publish Foreign Affairs, a journal on global issues. To increase the understanding by the people of the United States about societies and cultures of the world, we support a variety of organizations and programs focused on both cultural affairs and public policy programs. The Asia Society and the Corporate Council on Africa are currently funded by ExxonMobil.

Organizations that are dedicated to research on free market solutions to public policy problems receive support from ExxonMobil. The American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research and the Competitive Enterprise Institute, organizations dedicated to strengthening the foundations of freedom and to the principles of free enterprise, receive support from ExxonMobil.

Through various memberships and affiliations, we support the promotion of business views and solutions on a wide range of global economic and business policy issues. We fund the United States Council for International Business, International Chamber of Commerce and the National Foreign Trade Council to obtain business-critical information about international policy and regulatory issues.
